

Political Mobilization of the Working Class

The political mobilization of the working class: We would like to present this under three headings.

1. The Present Status of the Working Class: In the globalized, privatized and liberalized environment, the manufacturing sector is largely neglected and huge investments are laid in the service sector and share market.

Along with this, the number of middle class has increased to a large extent. Retrospectiveness, liberalism, individualistic anarchism, legalism, and system denial prevail. It dominates the working class. At the political level, religious schism, casteism, and chauvinism ideas prevail.

Today's environment is a counter-revolutionary phase. The number of proletariat is very small and the number of unorganized workers is very large and the largest number of contract workers are in big factories.

2. Most of the trade unions that have mobilized the working class under their leadership have pushed the workers into the liberal legalist reformist economist grave. Lacking any interest in carrying revolutionary politics among the working class, trade unions promoting left-wing politics have failed to build class struggles among the working class.

The exact direction and practice of carrying revolutionary politics among the working class remains unclear. On the political mobilization of the working class, although we have to make active efforts to politicize the working class on various fronts, we have to politicize in two main directions.

Politicization Through Determined Class Struggle: To politicize the working class through determined class struggle to rescue the working class from the legalistic reformist economist quagmire of the trade unions.

3. Organizational Form: As the trade union mostly concentrates on fighting for the day to day demands and economic demands of the workers, a separate form of organization has to be put forward to politicize the workers and carry forward the political struggles.

The working class will remain alienated from us. Therefore, it would be correct to bring the two elements of the politics of the people's democratic revolution that we are carrying out today, i.e. the scientific way of thinking+the democratic relationship and approach to our working class.

Because the next level of development from today's backward thinking of the working class is science and democratization. Instead of this, if we bring the high-level politics of communism and socialism to the working class, it will only help to alienate us from them.

The politicization of the working class can only be politicized primarily through class struggle and the continuous teaching of people's democratic politics (democracy + science), the politics of establishing working class power.
